Wailuku, Maui, Hawaii

Dear Grote:

The day on Maui was very enjoyable and educational for me. I thought it a particularly nice touch at the end when the plane reversed itself to gather up the belated Hawaiian vacationers. The aloha spirit really had me as I watched you fade into the distance for the second time.

For shipping anything you would like to have stored at Bound Brook the recommended procedure is to address it thusly: Research-Cottrell, Inc., Finderne Manufacturing plant, Attention: Mr. Grote Reber, Bound Brook, New Jersey. Presumably you will have some sort of shipping papers that you can forward here so we can warn the shipping department of the impending arrival, and they in turn will be prepared to pick up the shipment at the port of entry.

On a different note, I killed a bit of time between my return to Honolulu and plane departure time by wandering into the tourist trap adjacent to the Princess Kaiulani Hotel. I believe it's called the Hawaiian Village but I don't guarantee it. One of the shops about half way back on the right hand side, entitled I believe the Smugglers' Den, had a basket containing some shells and a sign on it, "Busycon Perversun" and below that, "lefthanded whelps." The gal in charge at the moment indicated that these were shells which spiraled in the direction opposite to that of the normal whelp shells. She did not know much about it but indicated that the boss, who was not there at the time, knew all about them, where they came from and might even have some idea of their frequency.

Hope all goes well with your dismantling operations. Please give my best to Mr. Penhallow when you see him. I enjoyed the lunch and brief exposure to him.

We're off this afternoon for our Greenbrier meeting and the visit to Green Bank. I hope I'll have a chance to drop you a line sometime after we get back and make observations on what I encountered there. I'll also be looking forward to hearing how things are shaping up with you and when you may be heading on East.

Best wishes,

Hap Schauer
