Dear Grote:

Thanks very much for your very intriguing letter of June 6th. Can I assume from your statement that results have been considerably beyond expectations that you are making good your threat to obsolesce the big mirrors? In any case, I will carry on with some delightful speculation while awaiting word of how things progress further. Incidentally, you have my sympathy on the food problem. What's the matter with steaks the other four breakfasts during the week?

I am enclosing some draft specifications which Emberson sent me that apparently are being circulated for bids, but with no takers. As I understand it, so far no one has been willing to undertake the over-all job, even on the smallest version, but a few outfits have been willing to take individual bites. In sending the specifications to me Emberson commented as follows: "I might also add that any discussion in our office on reflector designs usually ends up with a look at Grote Reber's model. Everyone is impressed with the soundness of the design, and it is serving wonderfully to stimulate thinking."

The snow doesn't bother us at all here now. As a matter of fact, even the idea has a faint and dimly remembered nostalgia to it with the date of the official entrance of summer on the New York scene just past.

How are the finances holding out?

Best wishes,

Charles H. Schauer
