Dear Schuyler:

Nearly six months have gone by since you received my letter of 3rd March. Ample time has elapsed for you to secure the money and make the payment requested therein. Your long silence makes it appear that you do not wish to pay your just debts. Whatever your opinion on the matter, the least I expect of you is the decency to extend to me the courtesy of a reply.

Last November I asked of you what you were doing. Your cursory note of the following month skipped over this subject. I hope this is merely an oversight and not an indication of lack of pride of occupation. Again; what are you doing to earn a living? If you will supply me with your business address, it will not be necessary for me to write to you at your home.
