

29 Sept. 87

Greetings Brian:

Enclosed is copy of my latest effort at debunking Big-Bang Cosmology. I'd like to send one to Hap but have lost his address.

During past five years, I've submitted similar material to Nature, Science, Astronomical Journal, Physics Today, Mercury, History of Astronomy. In all cases the material was rejected or simply ignored. A year and half ago the IEEE asked me to write an article for their special issue on space plasma. Accordingly, I decided to try the same kind of material on them. As you see, they were delighted to publish my article and gave me a resounding sendoff. I'm quite flattered.

There is some sociology in the above. First, the astronomers and physicists have a vested interest in the status-quo, namely Big-Bang cosmology. The worst of these is SCIENCE. Second, the engineers have no vested interest in astronomy or cosmology. Accordingly, they are not inhibited by external prejudice. Obviously, science is not as open, impartial, objective and free as a lot of people would like to think. This is not surprising because all these organizations are run by people. They cannot help influencing the organization by their personal prejudice. I don't think there is anything malicious, sinister, or corrupt in this, just narrow minded incompetence. Sounds like 16th century church! Using a bit of imagination, my difficulties with the establishment today (organized science) are rather similar to the troubles of Copernicus and Galileo with their establishment in their day. Fortunately, the establishment has not yet started burning heretics (Bruno). I'm told some would like to start with me!

The media makes a living out of cheap sensation. Big-Bang cosmology is much more sensational than steady-state cosmology. The media doesn't know, or care; so it chooses sensation along with a lot of other trash we are loaded with everyday.

Things change with time. See enclosed clipping. The word I have is AAAS is now incorporated as a non-profit organization in District of Columbia. Twice I've tried to secure a copy of their charter and have been ignored. If you have contacts in DC, please ask them to get a copy. I want to see what the AAAS responsibilities are to maintain their non-profit status. Let us keep in touch.
